

Shared learning and visibility

One thoughtful contribution can become several accessible ways to learn.

IAE welcomes ideas for interviews, conversations and educational resources. Our community direction includes podcasts, accessible summaries and free publication formats. Begin with work worth understanding, then choose the format, attribution and reuse together.

A useful first output

Begin with the topic and audience. Agree an independent editorial contribution and the formats that will make it useful.

For the organisation

A permissioned source conversation can become a consistent article, interview, audio script or shareable resource, with a clear review and correction route.

For the people it supports

Contributors can explain their work without repeatedly retelling a personal story. Readers and listeners can choose a format and find a useful question or next step.

Review the benefit

Check accurate representation and usefulness; distinguish observed reach from demonstrated benefit.

What deserves a wider, better-informed conversation?

Explore the relevant IAE work and choose an enquiry route at iaeconsults.co.uk/working-together.html#offer-10

Prepare a useful first conversation

Use this sheet privately to shape a short outline. It is not an application, agreement or request for medical information.

Who is the work for?

Name the intended users and what they need to do. This keeps the output connected to a real task.

What is difficult now?

Describe one recurring question, handover or resource gap. An example helps define the work.

What would help first?

Choose a manageable output and how someone would use it. This prevents the brief becoming a list of activities.

Who should review and maintain it?

Identify the appropriate role and any format, language or timing needs. These shape the handover.

Leave out personal medical records and confidential case details. Keep or edit this on your device. Nothing is sent by downloading or completing this sheet.

Choose the appropriate contact route at iaeconsults.co.uk/working-together.html. Scope and arrangements are agreed before work begins.