

Industry, CROs and service providers

Make programme decisions work in delivery.

Sponsors, providers and delivery teams see different parts of a programme. The interfaces need the same clarity as the individual plans.

IAE provides independent senior input on access strategy, evidence planning, regulatory governance and service capability.

A useful first output

A decision brief, responsibility map and focused delivery priorities.

For the people you support

The operational decision can be translated into clearer staff guidance and user-facing information, with the next action and accountable role understood.

Possible starting points

Service design and handbooks

Begin with one journey. Leave with a service map and a handbook module your team can put to work.

Evidence and publishing support

Begin with one resource or source collection. Establish the key changes, source register and review responsibilities.

Tailored digital tools

Begin with one task and its intended users. Develop a brief and working demonstration for them to assess.

Community-informed service design

Begin with one open decision. Prepare an involvement brief and a practical feedback-to-action record.

Prepare a useful first conversation

Use this sheet privately to shape a short outline. It is not an application, agreement or request for medical information.

Who is the work for?

Name the intended users and what they need to do. This keeps the output connected to a real task.

What is difficult now?

Describe one recurring question, handover or resource gap. An example helps define the work.

What would help first?

Choose a manageable output and how someone would use it. This prevents the brief becoming a list of activities.

Who should review and maintain it?

Identify the appropriate role and any format, language or timing needs. These shape the handover.

Leave out personal medical records and confidential case details. Keep or edit this on your device. Nothing is sent by downloading or completing this sheet.
